PROWORDS - (PROcedural WORDS)

THIS IS	Identifies who is calling, should precede your callsign in every transmission during a DIRECTED NET operation.
OVER	Used at the end of a transmission when additional communications is expected.
OUT	Used to indicate that no further communication is expected, the conversation between the parties has ended.
ROGER	Means that you understood the transmission of another station. This is not to be confused with answering a question in the affirmative.
AFFIRMATIVE	Yes: a distinctive sound and clear meaning under noisy conditions.
NEGATIVE	No: a distinctive sound and clear meaning under noisy conditions
SAY AGAIN	Tells the other operator that you need a fill or repeat of information that was previously transmitted.
CORRECTION	I made an error and am transmitting again from the last correct word.
WAIT	Cease transmission until "wait" station resumes communication or signals "out". "Waiting" station is asking the frequency stay clear for a brief period. They are expected to resume communication shortly or end the communication with an "out".
MIXED GROUPS	Groups of letters and numbers that, taken together, represent a single group. The rule for transmitting mixed groups by voice: If the group starts with a letter, use "I SPELL" if a mixed group starts with a number use "FIGURES".
I SPELL	Use the phonetic alphabet. Many words in the English language sound alike but have entirely different meanings. In order to make certain that the recipient of information understands what word we're using, when we encounter words we cannot pronounce, words that sound like other words, or uncommon words, we phonetically spell them out.
INITIAL	A single letter will be phonetically spelled preceded by the proword "INITIAL". The words "I" and "a" are considered words, not initials, should not be pronounced phonetically.
FIGURES	Used to advise that you are about to transmit is a group of numbers, or, a mixed group containing both numbers and letters but beginning with a number.
NUMBER	Used to advise that you are about to transmit is a group of numbers only.
